

Manulife Vitality: Sukhminder V. Member Story

If I had to use one word to describe myself before I entered the Manulife Vitality program, it would be “sloth.”

Now, having been in the Manulife Vitality program, it would be “cheetah.”

I would describe my life as not just busy, but frankly overwhelming.
I'm a father of two. I'm a lawyer.

One thing that was sacrificed was exercise.

I was overweight, but I didn't see myself as that. I thought, OK, I'm active.

[Sukhminder stands outside]

I always figured that I would make changes in my life.

But being South Asian, heart disease is something I'm going to be predisposed to. It's something that I saw far too often.

[People walking along a pier]

You know, young men passing away in their thirties and forties.

[Sukhminder sits in his home]

So when I saw my mom going through recovery after open heart surgery, it was a big wake up in me.

[Seagulls walking and flying on a beach]

I knew that if I didn't make drastic changes to my life, I was going to be in the exact same place.

So, after I entered the Manulife Vitality program, it was improvements all around.

From fitness, to diet, to meditation. The improvements weren't just limited to physical. It was a focus on a holistic approach to all this.

So after I started exercising, and after I knew how many calories I was burning, I turned my attention to, well, how many am I consuming?

[Sukhminder leaves his house]

And then I started tracking my calories. It was a bit of an eye opener. When you start realizing how much you're consuming extra.

The key elements of the Manulife Vitality program for me are the metrics, of having the data to make better-informed decisions, to see how I'm doing. And that is kind of the gateway into, really, a sense of accountability.

[Sukhminder sits in his home]

I also like the annual checkups.

When you get to see those results through the app on your phone or through the website. And I think that information is absolutely vital in terms of healthy living in a very conscious way. And that's how I define living well.

It's always surprising when, you know, I show people old pictures of myself.

[Sukhminder sits in his home]

It's a radical change from who I used to be. One of the comments I always get is "You look ten years younger".

[Sukhminder stands outside and is stretching]

The impact it's had, not just on my health, but everyone around me is, I think, remarkable.

I have two young kids, five and three, and when I go running, they want to go running.

[Sukhminder runs outside]

And when I do yoga, they want to do yoga.

A few couple funny stories I have is, you know, my 3 year old.

I came home from yoga. It was usually early morning. And he, you know, he looks at me,

[Sukhminder sits in his home]

he's like, "Dad, did you go do yoga again?"

My life is probably busier than it's ever been. But I find almost a kind of Herculean strength in terms of tackling it.

[Sukhminder stands outside]

I can take on so much more because of the Manulife Vitality program.
