

Action: Baby smacking pots with a spoon, hard, over and over.

Some things you've been into for as long as you can remember.

Action: Panning across TV screen showing drummer playing on variety show.

It caught your eye.

Action: Concert goes jumping around to music.

Grabbed your attention.

Action: Close up of a blinking eye.

Captured your imagination.

Action: Group of girls in silhouette walking down a street at night.

Made you feel a certain way about yourself.

Action: Lecture hall lights going on.

Then time changed a bit.

Action: Woman putting laundry in a dryer.

There wasn't as much of it and there were other things to do.

Action: Close up of a baby, crying. Transitions, to woman in an office turning off her cubicle light.

These were good things to.

Action: Hands tapping on a woman's lap. Transition to hand tapping a pen on a desk.

But still there was always that something.

Action: Woman's hair blowing in the wind while riding in a convertible car.

What was it about it? The feel.

Action: Back of a woman's head, putting on earphones.

The sound.

Action: Old cartoon of band playing, transition to a marching band drumline, transition to traditional Japanese drummers.

Maybe. There were a lot of reasons.

Action: Close up of foot banging drum pedal.

And now, there's time again.

Action: Woman in her 60's sits at a drum kit and plays while smiling.

Time to get reacquainted. With that something.
